THE HEMLOCK OF SOCRATES.

That cup from which Socrates drank,
Purple or red or golden-burning light,
The glass with bubbles of impalpable light,
And cooling draught set to the lips of death;
What deep drink of passion or of mirth;
What potent liquor full of princely might,
And transcendent flavor of purest worth;
Which of all drinks the earth has known,
O Socrates, thou didst to be named with thine,
Which thou didst quaff the hemlock's bitter cheer?

O Socrates, thou didst not men's path:
Leaving others all time with vision clear,
A drinking death itself in pledge of truth,
—Aristotle in Youth's Companion.

37 LOMBARD STREET.

No young Philadelphia looking at Lombard Street, would suppose that it was one of the fashionable thoroughfares of the city. It is a narrow, crooked street, and its only claim to notice is that it is the residence of a family of the name of Socrates. The family is a French one, and the father, a man of the name of Socrates, is a man of the name of Socrates. The family is a French one, and the father, a man of the name of Socrates, is a man of the name of Socrates.

At this time we had a larger proportion of foreign merchants than now. Both French and Spanish dealers were engaged in trade and much respected for their probity and correct dealing. Among them, M. Auguste Perron was one time prominent. He had come here about 1850 and was a refugee from St. Domingo, and a Frenchman by birth. He lived at 37 Lombard street, and his neighbors regarded him as a man of the name of Socrates.

M. Perron was essentially a West Indian merchant and had undoubtedly in his time been a successful one. He had a large number of slaves, and he was a man of the name of Socrates. He had a large number of slaves, and he was a man of the name of Socrates.

CHRISTMAS CAKES.

ENGLISH PUDDINGS AND CAKES GO ALL OVER THE WORLD.

Strange as it may seem, there is a fashion in the manufacture of wedding cakes. A glance at the interior of a Big Cake Store—cakes of many kinds.

Christmas cakes, New Year's cakes, wedding cakes, christening cakes, birthday cakes, and cakes of all kinds, are to be seen in every cake store. The cakes are made of all sorts of ingredients, and are decorated with all sorts of things.

A Cure For Dyspepsia.

A sorrow faced, unhappy looking man came to Dr. B. in his office one day when the writer chanced to be present. He wanted some medicine for dyspepsia.

"I dunno exactly," replied the patient, "10 or 15 minutes, I guess."

"Does your food taste good?" Dr. B. asked.

"That it does," was the reply, "but I find an hour after I've eaten I'm near dying with distress."

"Do you drink much with your food?" Dr. B. asked.

"A pretty considerable amount," answered the man.

"That is a grave case," said the doctor, "but I can help you if you'll follow my directions."

Dr. B. gave the man a dark colored mixture in a bottle and said: "Now, it is the utmost importance that this medicine be taken properly. Put a teaspoonful into your cup of tea or coffee at each meal."

FRENCH COURTSHIP.

THE EYE OF THE VIGILANT CHAPERON WATCHES OVER IT.

The life of the schoolgirl in France is very uneventful—her demerit in the ballroom differs much from that of the American maiden.

The average American regards the French idea of marriage with a young girl with a certain amount of curiosity. The French girl is educated under the careful eye of her mother.

They are not, as we are, brought up to become a wife and mother. They are brought up to become a woman.

When she is about 18 years old, she makes her appearance in society. The walls of the French ballroom are always lined with chairs. The mother and daughter take their places side by side, and the two chairs are theirs for the evening.

On her card, she writes his name and address. Then she sits down on her chair and waits for her admirer.

"Thank you, mademoiselle," and "Thank you, monsieur," the couple part.

"Has he not a very nice name?" she asks.

"Yes, it is a very nice name," he replies.

COULD NOT READ HIS PRINTING.

Life Was Too Short for the Compositors to Deepen His Printing.

A number of men in an up town hotel recently chanced to be discussing the excellent, almost unapproachable, handwriting of a mutual friend.

"I hate to receive his letters," remarked one. "They drive me nearly crazy, and I often am tempted to throw them into the fire."

"But that might be no improvement," remarked another. "I know a case where a man in my own office where printing was done, secured a large number of letters from him."

"The order was productive of great improvement," and was the composing room in every instance was one, and that was the case with the printing of the letters.

day. The weeks of work on the case were entirely thrown away as the correspondence of the supposed prisoners and this was only possible left to the whereabouts of the men. I could not find out for several months, and letters in practically the same handwriting came from several cities, don't know where he mailed his replies, usually the letters were addressed to the general district writ-down From New York he I encircled the southern states, stopping at Atlanta, New Orleans Galveston, St. Louis, and finally reaching Denver the first.

I knew there would be little use chasing any of these rainbows, for the letters I received by the time they reached the city were so old that they were worthless. Having learned that the supposed prisoner had run in the west I was pleased when he reached Denver, and later two or three more from the same man, all in the same handwriting. The location of the ranch had made known to us through certain agents in the west, and when we supposed him to be in the city we went out to be certain in his den, as it were

One could not select a worse time in the year for a mission among the ranchmen than the present. The weather was so hot all the year aside from working up case and I knew if we could ever get one of the interested parties we would be forced to leave before we could do anything from one of the transcunental roads to the nearest station, I inquired the date to Ellettsford, which was the ranchman's home, with a view to leaving at least four hours' riding from me after leaving at a hotel everything not necessary I secured a horse and galloped to Ellettsford, where I arrived at 11 o'clock.

It was bitter cold weather, but the idea thought of to win a big man I knew when success crowned my efforts kept me from giving up.

A Hunter's Contentment For Camfers

Mr. Selous, the distinguished hunter and explorer in England, and has been in the wilds of Africa. How little he has to say for personal comfort may be gathered from the remark that he never thought taking any sort of conveyance, even to the extent of a horse, or a camel, or a dog, or a rest at night, would not be as uncomfortable as "For weeks together year after year, I have been in the open air, and in the shade of a blanket."

Asked if there were no reptiles to dispose under such conditions, Mr. Sel-replied that it, although venemous, was not so dangerous as snakes from them very rare and in all his experience he never known anybody, either native or foreign, to be killed by a snake abandoned in front of him. Said he snakes in these African forests. —Lon-

The Discovery of Telt

Telt is a union of animal hair with wax in such a manner as to produce a firm, op-aque substance. Its discovery was of much importance that it seemed necessary to attribute it to divine agency, and he was the first to make the discovery. St.
St. Clement was fleeing from his persued by his bet he became blistered and in to abate the pain he placed wool between his feet and the ground. He was to continue his journey the wool by the sprition action and pressure of his feet became a uniformly compact substance, which he used to make shoes. The Catholic butters of Ireland and other places had a festival on St. Clement's Nov 23 in honor of the discovery—

Remarkable Evidence.

A case is quoted by Esquire in which some police officers were shot at by a wayman in a dark night. One of the officers stated that he could distinctly remember the wayman as being dressed in a dark brown horse of remarkable shape about the head and shoulders, that he had seen identified the horse
as being the property of a certain gentlemen, and that he was considered more satisfactory than that of the man who wore it.
He recognized a robber by the light produced by the flash of a revolver.

The Great Wall of China.

The scenery from the great wall is very fine. The wall is here a dividing line between the high, rugged hills of China, which tower above the plain, and the low, great, sandy plains of Mongolia on the other, with mid mountain summits beyond in the distance. Over these barren, rocky spurs and acclivities, about the base of the wall, grow a few stunted, scrubby trees, the curves and zigzags, the stately battlement clear cut against the sky on the top of the ridge, leading into dark gulches on the one side, and the level, grassy plain on the less line of massive stone and brick runs on and on until lost to sight behind the next barbican range.

And all this for miles and miles, eastward to the Pechili gulf and westward to the Gobi Desert, and all this for the purpose of keeping the Chinese from the Shan region. However we may regard whether as a grand conception for the defence of the empire, or as a waste of money, or merely as a result of the persistent application of human labor, it was stupendous work. No achievement of the present can compare with it in magnitude.—Century

Squire Onaldestone's undertaking took 230 miles in ten hours, which he accomplished at a gallop, and he was not a very young man.

November 1881 is one of the most remarkable years of endurance in the saddle, and has the merit of freedom from cruelty. The squire rode his race horses every four miles, changing his horse every four miles. Four miles is a safe limit for any purpose as that splendid horseman knew

Greeting Friends in Public.
A woman is sometimes annoyed by informal manner in which some of her intimate friends address her in public. She may be a brother or a cousin who publishes on the street, with a nod and a wink, and she is not at all averse to the word, but a stranger, not knowing the greeting might get a wrong impression. In such cases, whether the hat is lifted or not, she would like the same appearance and respect that she would expect from an intimate friend—Manchester Union

Mail Matter in Clubs.
Every club in New York is more or less embarrassed by the accumulation of letters. The members of the men's clubs furnish the clerk with no address at all, but they then call for their mail at long intervals. Others evidently give certain correspondents their club address, but not their home or business address. Club clerks are the most disapproving, and one shivers at possible domestic or commercial consequences suggested to some of a man's accumulated mail without his order—New York Sun
